Roh Sees Threat In Strikes

South Korean Reform in Peril, Chun Ally Says

By Don Oberdorfer and Fred Hiatt Washington Post Service

SEOUL — The ruling party's presidential candidate, Roh Tae Woo, said Tuesday that a wave of labor unrest threatened the drive toward democracy in South Korea, and he appealed to management and labor to exercise "self-restraint" to resolve the spreading

Mr. Roh said in an interview that "we should watch very carefully" what he called radical "outside forces" seeking to take advantage of the sudden release of long-standing government pressure to hold

At the same time, Mr. Roh said that the main demands of workers for higher pay were reasonable and that in the past the government was "unfair" in intervening too extensively in labor-management rela-

Mr. Roh's comments came as wildcat strikes disrupted operations at about 140 companies, including some of the largest and most successful enterprises in South Korea.

Hyundai Motor Co. had to shut down for the second time in a week because strikes among its suppliers cut off the flow of essential parts. The Daewoo and Kia Motor companies were also closed by supplier strikes while major shipyards, coal mines, and bus and taxi companies halted operations when their work-

No World Oil Crisis Seen in Gulf Tension

By Mark Potts ington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Tensions in the Middle East are threatening oil shipments, but oil industry executives, analysts and U.S. govern-ment officials say that nothing short of an all-out war in the Gulf would provoke an energy crisis of the proportions of the two oil shocks of the 1970s.

There is considerable slack in the world's oil supply chain, industry experts say. Although the non-Communist world uses about 47 million barrels of oil a day, its oil fields have a capacity about 10 milforts and the development during the past decade of oil fields in Alaska, Mexico and in the North Sea.

While some of the excess capacity is in the Gulf, there is enough where to make up for much of the six million to nine million barrels a day that would be lost in a complete shutdown of shipments of oil through the Strait of Hormuz. barrels a day, also could be divert-ed into pipelines for shipment, experts say.

In addition, most oil-consuming nations have taken steps since the tide nations through a time of shortage. For example, Japan, which imports all of its oil and gets most of it from the Gulf, is believed to have 150 million barrels of oil parked in tankers off shore. That is enough to keep the nation going for 30 days in the event of a total loss of imports, which is considered highly unlikely. There have been major changes in the way oil is traded around the world. Since the 1979 crisis, oil futures markets have sprung up, giv-ing companies the ability to hedge their supplies, while structural changes in the oil industry have ticated in dealing for supplies of crude oil.

Taken together, these factors provide the world's oil supply with a much greater cushion than has been available in the past.

"Demand is up and imports are up, but it just seems that so much has changed since the last time we had a crisis that I'd be surprised to see a new one emerge," said John Sawhill, a former deputy secretary of energy who now is a partner in the Washington office of McKinsey & Co., a management consult-

RKO Denied Renewal of 14 Licenses

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche. WASHINGTON - A judge at the Federal Communications Commission on Tuesday denied renewal of RKO General Inc.'s licenses for 14 radio and television stations, citing the company's "dishonesty. No case ever before decided by this commission presents dishonesty comparable to RKO's," the adinistrative law judge, Edward J. Kuhlmann, wrote in his decision. RKO General officials in New York said they had not seen the decision and could not comment. The company, owned by Gen-Corp Inc. of Akron, Ohio, can appeal the decision to the commission. It will keep all its licenses until all appeals are exhausted. The stations include three in Los Angeles; two in Memphis, Tennessee; two in New York; two in Boston; and one each in Washington, San Francisco, Chicago, Bethesda, Maryland, and Fort Lauderdale, Florida. The licenses had come up for renewal over several years, but the commission had delayed acting in those instances, giving RKO the opportunity to leave the broadcasting business.

RKO's legal problems stemmed from the company's alleged lack of candor in connection with an investigation of its parent corporation. then known as General Tire &

Rubber Co. In reaching his decision, Judge Kuhlmann also considered claims that RKO Radio Networks Inc. falsely billed for $7 million in advertising and purposely destroyed an internal audit of improper deals. The Federal Communications Commission denied RKO's license for WNAC-TV, Boston, in 1980 for corporate misconduct and had threatened to take away licenses for its other broadcast properties.

After 25 years of marriage, couples who bore no particular resemblance when first married came to resemble one another, although the resemblance might

The more marital happiness a couple reported, the greater their increase in facial resemblance. The increase in facial similarity probably results from decades of shared emotions, according to Robert Zajone, a psychologist at the University of Michigan, who did the research. In the study, people were presented a random array of photographs of faces, with the backgrounds blacked

U.S. officials said they were revising the U.S. trade balances from 1970 through 1986 because U.S. exports to Canada were undercounted.

After Pact, Contra Aid Is on U.S. 'Back Burner' By Elaine Sciolino

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The peace plan signed by five Central American leaders has put the Reagan administration's plans to gain new aid for the Nicaraguan rebels "on the back burner," according to a White House official. Even though the accord signed Friday does not address some of the region's most difficult problems and faces enormous obstacles, it has already succeeded in shifting the focus of the debate from Washington to Central America, White House and State Department officials acknowledged Monday. "Everything dealing with the contra aid package is definitely on the back burner," said the White House official, who declined to be identified. "To a certain extent, everyone is waiting to see what happens next."

Complaints on Airlines Soar in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Consumer complaints about airlines inreased dramatically in July over the same flouth last year, the U.S. Transportation Department said, with Continental, Northwest and East-ern receiving the most criticism.

There were 5,995 complaints against U.S. airlines last month, compared with 932 in July 1986, the department reported Monday. It received 255 complaints about foreign carriers, compared with 91 a year earlier.

Most of the complaints, 2,658, involved flight problems, while baggage nandling was second, with 1,358. The department said the large number of airline mergers had contributed to a sharp increase in complaints so far in 1987. Continental was the most airline most criticized in July, with 1.541 complaints filed.

Belgium to Proceed With Road Tax

BRUSSELS (AFP) - Belgium is to proceed with its plan to impose a pecial tax on foreigners using the country's highway system. Prime Minister Wilfried Martens said Tuesday.

The tax of 500 Belgian francs ($13) a year is to be introduced next year, he said, but it must obtain parliamentary approval. Foreign drivers will be required to buy and display a windshield sticker, showing that they have paid the tax. International road transport organizations have opposed the plan.

A British Airways Concorde with 93 passengers on board blew five of its 10 tires on landing at Kennedy International Airport in New York on Tuesday, but there were no injuries and no damage to the aircraft, the company said.

Tourists fled their hotels and furee villages were evacuated as a forest fire swept the Greek island of Rhodes on Toesday. The governor of the Dodecanese region, Yannis Macharaidis, said that 25,000 acres (10,000 hectares) had been affected, but the government department dealing with identified by the State Department as a major in Cuba's intelligence service has described his defection to the United States as part of a widespread revolt by agents against heavy spending by President Fidel Castro on spy activities.

Cuba Intelligence Agents In Revolt, Defector Says

Major Florentino Aspillaga Lombard, 40, defected June 6 by entering Austria from Czechoslovakia, where he was serving as an agent, according to the State De-partment, which said Monday it would offer no other information.

The U.S. Information Agency's Radio Maru, however, detailed the case of Major Aspillaga after broadcasting to Cuba on Sunday the first part of an interview with him. In it, he detailed charges of corruption in high places, described dealings with the current military chief of Panama, and offered the first inside explanation of leadership changes in the Ministry of the Interior.

Egypt Cancels News Coverage Of Maneuvers

Washington Past Service CAIRO - Egypt has canceled news media coverage of upcoming Egyptian-American military maneuvers, opting instead to give the exercises minimum visibility in light of recent riots in the Saudi Arabian city of Mecca and Iranian threats against the United States and its "lackeys." The five-day Bright Star exercises, biannual events that include joint land, sea and air maneuvers, are scheduled to begin Saturday. About 9,000 American troops and an equal number of Egyptian soldiers are expected to participate. U.S. troops and equipment already have arrived in Egypt.

Observers said the decision by the government of President Hosni Muharak to cancel news media coverage, which was shaping up to be the most extensive to date, is an attempt by Egypt to avoid provoking Iran. Since the clashes between Iranian pilgrims and the Saudi police in Mecca almost two weeks ago, in which at least 275 Iranians died, tension in the Arab world has increased. Iran accused the United States of being behind the violence and threatened to retaliate against the United States and its "lackeys."

Sources said Tehran might view highly publicized American maneuvers in Egypt as a provocation.

For Foes, Sandinist Hold Is No Straitjacket

By Stephen Kinzer New York Times Service MANAGUA - Although the

Sandinist front dominates every as-pect of Nicaraguan political life, a lively internal opposition remains active in the country. Restrictions on civil rights are daunting but dissent within limits is tolerated.

Many politically active Nicaramans have left the country out of the conviction that effective internal opposition is impossible. Nearly all the leaders of the U.S.-backed rebels known as contras, for example, were once party organizers inside Nicaragua.

Nevertheless, hundreds of anti-Sandinist figures still operate publicly in Nicaragua.

Many have incurred the government's wrath since it came to power in 1979, and some have been jailed. But all harbor the belief that they can carve out political space for themselves and use it to challenge Sandinist rule, exerting pressure to change policies and perhaps even taking power.

Mr. Guido is a leader of the Democratic Conservative Party and vice president of the Sandinist dominated National Assembly, He received 13 percent of the vote in the presidential ballot.

"At this moment, political freedom in Nicaragua is quite limited," he said. "People are afraid to speak out because they risk not only going to jail, but also losing their farms or property if they are convicted as counterrevolutionaries. We can't take our views to the people because we have no access to newspapers or television." "We are in a system that is not democratic in the Western sense, but that could evolve into a democracy," he added. "People like me are losing now, but if we give up, it would be disastrous for our country's fatare."

The Nicaraguan Constitution uarantees political freedom, but the government has declared various states of emergency since 1982, when the anti-Sandinist guerrilla war began to intensify.

Studies Split On Reagan's Record on Economics

By Nathaniel C. Nash New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Joint Economic Committee of Congress has reaffirmed that economics is far from a nonpartisan science.

In its midvear assessment, the Democratic majority issued a stinging report on Monday warning about the long-term consequences of the U.S. debt owed to foreigners. put at $264 billion at the end of last year, while the Republican minority praised President Ronald Reagan's economic policy as the reason for almost five years of economic expansion, low unemployment, low inflation and low interest rates. "We have fallen from the position of the world's major creditor to become the world's largest net debtor," said Senator Paul S. Sarbanes, Democrat of Maryland and chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, on the majority staff's report, titled, "The Economy at Midyear: A Legacy of Debt."

"The foreign debt represents an enormous potential claim on the American standard of living of future generations," he said.

"Like 'Old Man River,' the economy just keeps rolling along," said the Republican report, titled "Setting the Record Straight: The Phoenix Expansion."

The report continued: "Credit for this dramatic economic recovery and persistent expansion is dily traced to the free-enterprise foundation of our economic system and the Reagan administration's adherence to sound economic prin-

In the report by the Democratic majority, America's net investment position is traced from 1981, when was a net creditor with a $141. billion surplus, to the end of 1986, when the net amount owed to foreigners hit a record $263.6 billion a $405 billion deterioration in the U.S. position in five years."

It attributed the reversal to a complex series of events, including the uncompetitiveness of American exports because of the high value of the dollar, excessive government spending that created too much demand for imported goods and services, an unwillingness by Japan and West Germany to stimulate consumption in their own economies and an inability by Third World countries to import more from the United States.

Although acknowledging that the recent drop in the value of the dollar seems to be improving the trade picture, the committee staff cited estimates that the growth in the deficit would not stop until the 1990s, at which time the United States would have foreign debt outstanding of $700 billion to $800

About the only subject on which Republicans and Democrats solve those problems is more robust growth, not a severe recession.

Conceivably, the Alfonsin government could reduce domestic demand and spur ranchland investment by allowing meat prices to rise. But this would be politically empopular. "Cheap meat, happy people that's been the motto of govern-ments here for years," said Mr. Acuna, himself a cattle owner.

Also, since beef constitutes such significant share of household budgets, higher beef prices could wreck the government's anti-inflation program. Fluctuations in beef prices drastically affect the cost of living, interest rates and black-market dollar exchange rates.

A steep 41 percent rise in meat prices last month, for instance, was cited as a major contributor to July's 10.1 percent jump in the cost of

Back the Black Miners

In a sense, much that has been happening foreign exchange earnings. Even a brief in South Africa has been merely preliminary. The strike of black miners against the country's gold and coal producers is the main event. Black unions like the mineworkers, acting lawfully, offer the best remaining hope for a peaceful transition to democracy. It is in the interest of South Africans, black and white, that the miners succeed. It is in the interest of the United States and the West to help them in any way possible. Cyril Ramaphosa, general secretary of the National Union of Mineworkers, has assessed the stakes for South Africa's black masses assutely. "If we win this strike," he said, "it is going to be a significant motivation for all other workers to continue with their own struggle for a living wage. If we lose, it will have a devastating effect."

The key issue is fair pay. The black miners take home $150 to $250 a month. They want a 30 percent raise. That would still leave them with less than half the typical white miner's $750. The South African Chamber of Mines, representing five com-panies with 73 mines, imposed raises of 15 to 23 percent. The union called a strike; leaders now claim that almost half the mines have been affected.

The dispute is nominally between workers and private employers. But the government has a large stake in it as well. The country's 51 gold mines last year yielded 640 tons, which accounted for 60 percent of disruption of production could rock the already ailing South African economy. More worrisome to the government is the growing power of black unions. When they were legalized 10 years ago, it was thought that they would be escape valves for black discontent. Instead they have become crucibles of black power. While the law bans political activity by unions, the line between economic and political activity is necessarily indistinct. That ambiguity could provide an excuse for the government to step in and break the strike - or even the union.

The first task for the United States is to make Pretoria understand clearly that any such action would demonstrate bad faith in the most elementary of human rights issues. Washington and the West can also make plain that they will take whatever steps practicable to show their displeasure. One fitting penalty would be to ban the export of mining equipment to South Africa. Other measures are still available in addition to the sanctions that the United States has already imposed.

The Reagan administration remains oddly insensitive to the rigidities of the white government, even when it would be so right, and easy, to proclaim solidarity with the courageous miners. If South Africa cares at all about its standing in the civilized world, it will do no less than deal fairly with a legally constituted union.

Free Speech vs. Secrecy

Ken Dodd, executive editor of The carpts from and descriptions of the contents. For Americans exhausted by discussion and analysis of U.S. national security operations this summer, the saga of Mr. Wright's book, "Spycatcher," is a reminder of how very differently the two countries treat freedom of speech and of the press when the government tries to keep sensitive material secret. Because of contractual obligations of secrecy binding on all government employees, "Spycatcher" was not published in Britain. The book contains some sensational charges, among them that intelligence agents conspired to discredit Harold Wilson's Labor government because they believed that the prime minister was under the influence of the Soviets. The Thatcher government has tried to stop publication of the book in Australia, where Mr. Wright now lives, and has moved in court against newspapers both at home and in Hong Kong that have published ex-

Last month, Britain's highest court of appeals upheld the government in proceedings evidence and arguments presented during the court hearings in Australia.

All this litigation may be useless in practical terms. The book has been published in the United States and copies of the American edition are being sold on the streets of London. A former Labor cabinet member has defied the government by reading "Spy-catcher" aloud at Hyde Park Corner.

The British government has had wide powers to suppress publications in the interest of state security or, some allege, to spare itself great embarrassment. This case has prompted debate on the wisdom of allowing such restrictions. It is not easy to deal with sensitive information in a public forum, but it is even more difficult, notwithstanding the efforts of international litigators, to keep a secret in one country when it is published as news in another. Ask the people in Washington, who saw their secret Iran dealines blown in a Middle Eastern newspaper last fall.

The Balkans of the 1980s

Much of the world is wondering what exactly the Reagan administration - or Security Council meet as soon as possible to Europe in the summer of 1914.

In a rare show of peace-oriented and conciliatory posture last month, the Soviet Union joined the other permanent members of the UN Security Council in calling for a cease-fire in the Gulf war. At the same time, however, the Kremlin has been making moves which might rather encourage radicals in the belligerent nations.

Whatever the rights and wrongs between Iran and Iraq, the number of real or potential combatants is almost daily altering the nature of the conflict. Another loose mine, or a mindless act of terrorism or even a simple radar failure could take us to the brink.

- The Japan Times (Tokyo).

Try the Security Council

It is now urgent that the United Nations the Kremlin or the Iranian government, for that matter—is up to in a region that is to the 1980s what the Balkans were to have been every bit as damaging as Iran's, chose a moment of extreme tension [on Monday), while Kuwaiti-American tankers were stalled by a mine, to attack Iranian oil installations across a wide front. The holing of the Texaco Caribbean outside the Strait of Hormuz cannot automatically be ascribed to Iran: She was carrying Iranian oil.

The main doubt must be whether the Soviet Union, whose legitimate interest in the Gulf has for so long been denied by the United States, could at this stage be cajoled into cooperation. But that is worth a determined effort, and it may be that the country best qualified to make it is Britain.

Reagan: A President Adrift and Incurious

D URHAM, North Carolina — Is Irangate Watergate revisited? As in Watergate, one little accidental revelation popped open a fantastic political can of worms, a pile of twisted deceptions, a tangle of operations running outside the constitutional fence. As in Watergate, what looked at first like a low-level imbroglio soon crawled up to the White House and eventually into the lap of the president himself.

But there the similarity ends. President Reagan is as guilty for his failure to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed" as Richard Nixon was, but their sins are very different. If there is a civics lesson here, it is that watching out for another Richard Nixon will not protect America from another Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Nixon's problem was conspiracy; his right-ly calculated secret operation to nail down his enemies and thus confirm his power. What he knew and when he knew it were relevant questions; it turned out that he was deeply involved in the details. The cover-up story was similarly signif-icant; information had to be wrenched out of the administration bit by bit, against hard resistance. And at the core of the story was Mr. Nixon, yet another president driven into tragedy by his insatiable need to prove his manhood.

Viewing the Iran-contra scandal through the Watergate lens doesn't work. The former illustrates a different but equally dangerous type of presidential fiasco that Americans have to learn to ward against. President Nixon drove his disaster: resident Reagan Boated into his.
In November 1986 the news broke in Lebanon that America was trading arms for hostages, despite Mr. Reagan's hand-on-the-heart statements that no decent nation should do any such thing.

Donald Regan, the White House chief of staff, put out a cryptic in-house memo: "Blame must be put at NSC's door — rogue operation, going on without president's knowledge or sanction. When suspicions arose, he took charge, ordered investigation, had meeting of top advisers to get at facts and find out who knew what. Try to make the best of a sensational story ... anticipate charges of 'out of control,' 'President doesn't know what's going on, 'who's in charge.'

Through the congressional hearings, President Reagan's top officials followed Mr. Regan's instructions, continually touting the president as Mr. Decisive. "One of his most outstanding attributes is decisiveness," we were told. But if one follows their narratives rather than their adjectives, a different Ronald Reagan appears.

Repeatedly, Secretary of State George Smitz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger bad argued to the president that selling arms to Iran was a bad idea, sometimes in meetings at which or, later, of the diversion of funds to the contras, as the national security adviser and the CIA director took the opposite tack. Who won? By the ac-

of Mr. Reagan coming forth with a definite decision. Instead they appeared to confirm Mr. Shultz's view that "nothing ever gets settled in this town" --- not even in the Oval Office.

To the public and to the world, Presiden Reagan came on loud and clear, sounding and looking decisive, as when he declared "Operation Staunch" as a national policy of no deals with terrorists. But in the privacy of the White House. if the top-level testimony is to be believed, it was hard for the president's major advisers to discern his thinking, for months at a time. His curiosity was equally retarded. When his chief military, foreign policy and intelligence advisers pushed their battle into his presence, he sat still and listened. Controversy at the top of his administration did not stimulate him to seek out the facts. At one point Mr. Weinberger asked, "Are you really interested in my opinion?"

Several times Mr. Reagan confirmed that he had president did not know what his own staff was doing" - and it was making major strategic moves. As Mr. Regan said, regarding the president's secret authorizations, "A presidential finding is swer. On occasion, each came away from such a not lightly made." But the president could not recall making the first one, and did not think to mention to his top officers, three times in a row, that he had signed such a finding either the day before or that same day. Despite his emotional concern for the "freedom fighters," he did not try to find out where they were getting their money. Moreover, he apparently got the balance of mili-tary power between Iran and Iraq backward.

his own testimony, Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North, running a big slice of foreign and military policy under the National Security Council umbrella, was in meetings with the president and a few others some 22 times, but Mr. Reagan did not get to know what the colonel knew at all. Not even when he approved the dismissals of Colonel North and Rear Admiral John Poindexter did he summon them to give him the facts.

His disciples followed his example: Mr. Shultz told Admiral Poindexter not to give him details; Mr. Weinberger was not informed that Saudi Arabia was supplying some $75 million to the contrast neither he nor Mr. Shultz knew about the findings or the diversion of funds from the arms sales. The attorney general was not in on the crucial legal questions. In short, conflict at the top triggered withdrawal, not inquiry.

Except when the story leaked. The White House leapt into action to manage the president's public relations — from the start its primary concern. Confused as his briefing was, Mr. Reagan once again came on as the strong leader.

In fact, the president was presiding over a daisy chain of command, in which the official at each level avoided responsible supervision of the next one down. It was a circus overseen by a disbanded cabinet whose members, supposedly responsible for making the right results happen, were satisfied if they had made their verbal points in meetings. As always, Mr. Reagan got his strongest signals from those most often in the same room with him, who led him steadily into shredding political logic.

From the first, as Budget Director David Stockman noticed years ago and others even earlier, the danger of the Reagan presidency has been drift and accident, even chaos, rather than Nixonian rigidity. An easygoing, affectionate persona and a readily directable theatrical style ser Mr. Reagan up for dependence on the luck of the draw. Now, with his military forces sprawled about the world's most dangerous terrains and waterways, he has the rest of us set up for the risk of disaster.

Break Out ' And Avoid The Mines

By Stansfield Turner

WASHINGTON - Disputching minesweepers to the Gulf region is not the answer to preventing attacks on international shipping. supertanker hit a mine just outside the Strait of Hormuz. The problem is a lack of political will, not a lack of minesweeping capability or naval firepower. With a change of political guidance from the White House, most of the threat to Gulf shipping would disappear—without the need to resort to military force. There is a common misconception that the shipping lane where a re-flagged Kuwaiti tanker, the Bridge-ton, hit a World War I vintage Iranian mine last month is only two or three miles wide. Actually, the deep water shipping lane is more than 60 miles wide from the Strait of Hormuz all the way to Kuwait.

The implications of this discovery for strategy in the Gulf are clear. There are two ways to counter mines. One is to sweep them, but the U.S. Navy seems not to have been well prepared for this. The other technique is simply to avoid the mines by steering ships clear of them. That is relatively easy to do in the Gulf. It would be almost impossible for Iran to mine all of the waters in the area where the Bridgeton was hit and, besides, doing so would impede Iran's own tankers. If tanker convoys were to follow random courses through the full width of the Gulf, their chances of getting through unscathed would be high without any minesweeping. Only when they converge on the loading terminal at Kuwait would there be any need to sweep mines, and the navy aiready has the capabili ty to do such small-scale sweeping.

Why aren't the reflagged tankers using the whole Gulf? Because Ayatollah Khomeini has restricted international shipping to a narrow zone. At the point the Bridgeton was hit, the convoy had been within that two-mile slice of the 60-mile-wide channel. No wonder the Iranians knew so certainly where to plant the mines.

Why is the United States respecting the Iranian's restrictions? Richard L. Armitage, assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, has said that President Reagan ap-proved in advance the Bridgeton's remaining within the two-mile zone.

Not only is this not an answer, it contrasts starkly with the president's willingness twice to provoke Moam-mar Gadhafi of Libya over his claims to exclusive control of the Gulf of Sidra, In both instances, the United States engaged Libyan forces in com-bat. Why will it not provoke Iran?

The risk is that Iran might openly attack ships if they ventured outside the two-mile path. That would likely bring on war. The alternative is to risk more casualties to American ships and men through untraceable mine attacks. If the navy keeps using the permitted channel, nothing will deter the Iranians from continuing to mine it. Under the present policy, Washing-ton is caught between the risk that the

Violating these restrictions and avoiding the mines is the best recourse. It is unfair to send men and ships continually toward the mine risks of the narrow channels, if Iran is going to take America on, at least it should have to do so openly. To reduce the chance of conflict, Washington could warn Tehran of the consequences of its continued challenge to the right to use international waters

The way to prove that you mean business is to bring to the Gulf large numbers of the very weapons that Iran is using: mines. Then if Iran persists in interfering with the ships that America is protecting, the United States should mine Iran's harbors. The navy could easily lay enough mines to cut off sea commerce between Iran and the outside world, thereby cutting off all Iran's oil exports, its principal source of foreign exchange.

A mining campaign would have the advantage of being nonlethal, at least until Iran challenged the mine fields. It could minimize the damage of becoming engaged in a drawn-out war with Iran, but still provide considerable short-term leverage.

Better that it not give the ayatollah any such hope by continuing supinely to obey his illegal dictate about where to sail. There really is no choice other than to avoid the mines by using the broader zone and to be prepared for what the consequences may be.

No One Lost and Democracy Won woman holding the string of a Duka-

MARION, lowa — Six months from now, in the chill of early February, when Iowans express their presidential preferences in precinct aucuses, the candidates will face the first brutal accounting of winners and losers. A few will walk away taller and stronger, most will come out weakened and wounded, their hopes marked for early extinction.

But last Saturday night, in the park at Cedar Rapids where Linn County Democrats had their picnic, it was different. It was quiet and peaceful and friendly and — most of all - thoughtful a place where good and gentle people in a sylvan setting could perform one of democracy's most important but unheralded acts: listening carefully. Even the rain could not distract them. And the candidates were moved. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, one of the six hopefuls who spoke from the open-air platform, caught the tone: "All of us who have come to your state notice the approach you take. You are almost worried you might make a mistake and choose the wrong candidate, because you know you have such an impact. Almost 1,000 lowans brought their folding chairs and blankets to the park in late afternoon. They stood patiently in lines to fill their plates with bratwurst, beans and potato salad and to pick up plastic cups of draft beer. It was a family crowd — the youngsters spilling down the spiral slides while their parents wandered among the candidates' tables, picking up literature and signing their names to volunteer lists.

And then, in the long twilight, with the rays from the sun tipping the tops of low-hanging clouds, they gathered to listen to the men who would lead their party and country.

By David S. Broder

The names and faces were just becoming familiar to them; the messages were not hackneyed to their ears. They listened with an intensity that each of the speakers recognized.

This is a very special state, a special place, and you are very special people," Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts said in a tone that seemed more descriptive than flattering.

family feeling to Iowa-style presi-dential politics, particularly at this early stage. It softens the edge of ambition. In the afternoon, Mr. Dukakis and Mr. Gore had found themselves scheduled back to back before some 45 Democrats at Mother's Kitchen, a restaurant in Tama. Mr. Dukakis was still answering questions when Mr. Gore arrived. It could have been an awkward moment, but Mr. Dukakis simply introduced his rival by recalling that in the 1950s and '60s Mr. Gore's father, the former senator, "was one of my great heroes" for his fights against segre-gation and the Vietnam War, Mr. Gore, clearly touched, said, "I've never been introduced by an opponent before - and never so well."

Now, as young Gore spoke to the crowd, his gray-haired father sat on the steps leading to the platform, his eyes and his thoughts seemingly fo-cused far away. Nearby, Richard Gephardt of Missouri stood talking to Elaine Baxter, Iowa's secretary of state. Earlier in the day, at the conclusion of a Geobardt-Dukakis debate in Des Moines, she had become the last Democratic statewide elected official to make an endorsement. She chose to support Mr. Dukakis. Now she stood, a middle-aged kis balloon, talking with the young congressman with whom she had made many campaign appearances last year as they both pursued their ambitions. If there was any tension in the encounter, it did not show. When Paul Simon of Illinois was taking his turn, it began to drizzle. He hurried through his talk, making way for Jesse Jackson — who had just started when the rain hardened. We will return as soon as we get a However high the stakes, there is a break from on high," he said. After ten minutes, the rain sputtered out and the crowd - unsated after 90 minutes of speeches by Jo-seph Biden of Delaware, Mr. Gephardt, Mr. Gore and Mr. Simon quickly left the food tents and settled back on the wet seats to listen. Mr. Jackson did not disappoint. Often this year he has read prepared speeches in a mechanical, unemotional tone, but on this night he let fly in his preacher style. Shortly, the rain resumed. "If we can survive Ronald Reagan for sev-en years." Mr. Jackson said, "we can stand the rain for just a few minutes." No one moved. The more it rained, the more inspirational he became, especially on the subject of himself, "defying the odds, climbing the mountains." As he led the crowd in chants, the rain stopped, and so did he

Mr. Dukakis, with the impossible task of following him, asked, "Do you really want another speech?" When the conscientious Iowans shouted "Yes," he said, "I can't believe it." But he gave it, and they seemed to like him, too. This night, the Iowans were determined that no one would lose, and no one did. If there was a

Still a Pretty Good Street, But Coping Takes a Fight

By A.M. Rosenthal

N EW YORK — The street is called Knox Place and is one block long. in a corner of the northwest Bronx. Two men are walking on it. David McKenzie is 32 and lives here with his young family. I lived in the small apartment house near the corner, before he was born.

It was a pretty good street then. Working-class families lived here, a few professionals like teachers, some people looking for work and scraping along.

ON MY MIND

Decent apartments, good shopping a few blocks away on Jerome Avenue,

Parks and schools nearby.

Nothing ever happened on Knox Place except life, so it was startling to see the name in the newspaper, a paragraph in an article about people working to help their own neighborhoods.

It was almost four decades since I had been in the neighborhood but I found that I could get there with my eyes closed. Knox Place and Gates Place, the street around the corner where a sister and brother-in-law lived.

Most of the other streets were also named after American heroes. I thought that gave the neighborhood a certain cachet because you would run across them in schoolbooks: Rochambeau, Decatur, Bainbridge, Marion, Webster. And Dekalb, where my mother and I moved when $50 a month on Knox became a little pricey.

Most of the Jews and Irish who lived on Knox have moved out; not all. There are a lot of Spanish signs on the stores and mostly black and brown faces in the street. It is still a pretty good street. I realized, with embarrassment, that I had not expected that, and had visions of graffiti and broken windows. Same kind of street — decent buildings, peo-ple making a living or scraping along.

But there are two important differences, and they are connected. One is that the people who live on Knox and Gates have to bend together to keep it safe and decent enough for their children.

In my time we did not have more money than the people living there now, but we took it for granted that the street was a safe front yard. Who ever heard of neighborhood associations? For what?

Letters intended for publication should be addressed "Letters to the Editor" and contain the writer's signature, name and full address. Letters should be brief and are subject to editing. We cannot be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts.

The other difference is drugs. It is a life-changing difference between my Knox Place and Mr. McKenzie's.

We never heard of drugs or junkies or pushers or pills or needles. Now Mr. McKenzie and his neighbors know that neither they nor their children can live in decency on Knox or Gates or Decatur or any other street unless they fight drugs. They fight like hell.

It is tiring; a step forward, a step back. Achievement or defeat is measured in things like a play street closed to traffic.

Mr. McKenzie, who makes his living working with juveniles and spends a lot of the rest of his time working with the Knox-Gates Neighborhood Association, talked intensely about the play street situation. He said that Knox Place had become a drug shopping market. Pushers would stroll the street, and enstomers would drive through it looking for a buy. Every child in every house knew it and saw it; some of the kids were used as runners.

The mothers and fathers wanted a street where they could keep an eye on their kids from the windows, spot the pushers and hassle them, tell the cruising customers to get out fast. They figured that if they closed the street they could use the road and sidewalks summer classes, games, anything to keep the kids together.

The block association got Knox Place closed on July 2. And it worked quite well. The pushers went elsewhere, the customers' cars no longer cruised Knox, the kids were within sight of the windows.

A few weeks later, Traffic Department people suddenly removed the "Play Street" signs. Some people in the blocks around Knox wanted to park their cars there. They signed a petition and won. Now the street is open and pushers are coming back. The summer program has been moved to a playground on the corner, but teen-agers won't go to a playground. They drifted away.

What difference does a closed street make? Won't the pushers go a few blocks away? Yes, Mr. McKenzie said, but then the people of that block will get together. Then kids will see parents fighting drugs, on Knox Place and other streets, and not just accepting it; that is what counts. Anybody interested in neighborhood self-help groups can write or call the Citizens Committee for New York City. And Mr. McKenzie hopes that somebody from City Hall or the borough president's office will think again about closing Knox Place. It can be found on a good city map, running between East Mosholu Parkway and Gun Hill Road, one block.

The New York Times.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Humiliation at the Border

Regarding "Arab Americans Report Mistreatment by Israel" (July 9):

Although Christian and of partial Jewish descent, I sympathize with the humiliation suffered by Palestinian Americans returning to their home-land. I attribute the following experience to the fact that my U.S. passport bears the stamps of Morocco, Tunisia and Jordan, as well as a five-month Egyptian student visa from my stay at the American University in Cairo.

I entered Israel at Taba, in the Sinai after passing the Egyptian checkpoint with no problems. The first question I was asked in Israel was, "Are you Jewish?" I have traveled to approximately 20 countries and do not recall ever before

Of the 20 or so persons attempting to clear customs at Taba I was the first to have my name called and the last to exit. My luggage was unpacked, every inch of it inspected, and I was made to go into a booth and empty my pockets while the security forces passed a metal detector over my body and inspected the beels of my shoes. One of my camera lenses was dropped and damaged. Particularly offensive was the inspection of my journais, personal letters and address book.

Once in the midst of Jerusalem's history and physical beauty, I forgot about this treatment at Taba. As bad as it was, what happened during my departure from Israel was worse. The first for a maximum of three months. As question I was asked at Ben Gurion airport was again. "Are you Jewish" This was the first question asked by four subsequent interrogators. I was repeatedly questioned as to my reasons for coming to Israel and my contacts there. I was asked to submit proof that I was a student while I was in Egypt, and was told that my student visa and my international student identity card were not sufficient. My luggage was once again inspected, inch by inch, and florescent orange stickers were affixed to it, my ticket and my boarding pass, labeling me as a security threat.

I was then told to proceed to my gate. When I got to the security check where hand luggage is again inspected, I was singled out because of the fluorescent stickers and told to proceed to yet another area. There my bag was searched by hand, rather than the usual X-ray, and I was made to enter a booth and strip to my underwear, following which I was frisked, my clothes were inspected, and a metal detector was run over my body. I have never been treated in a manner even vaguely resembling this before, nor have I ever felt so humiliated. I have no intention of ever returning.

DAVID NELSON GIMBEL. New York.

Once a year, a certain number of Palestinians with relatives living in the occupied territories are allowed to visit someone who on several occasions has passed the same crossing points as these unfortunate people. I can testify that Israeli soldiers address elderly men and women as donkeys and whores, and exempt no one from humiliating search. IRINA ZALLUCCI.

Dr. Zasloff is right on target. But his work, a classic example of scientific method - observation, wonder, conjecture, experimenting and testing - has another lesson, too: Let nature be conserved. We are not so smart as to know whether we may not need tomorrow what we casually think of destroying today.

Human knowledge, like practically crything else in this complex world of ours, advances by a process that pits variety and proliferation against selection and elimination. People are always having ideas and making suggestions, and other people are always challenging and rejecting them; the ones that survive criticism and work out in practice are added to the stock of tested wisdom.

Where do the proliferation and variety come from? In the case of ideas the answers are not always helpful - genius? serendipity? creativity? In fact it is rarer than we might think for something genuinely new to crop up, because we have inherited the products of some thousands of years of human imagination; a lot of scholarship consists of rereading and re-interpreting the work of our forebears. Even in the humanities, much of the new comes directly or indirectly from nature - a feeling produced by an expetience, an unexpected conjunction of events. But in science, nature remains one of the great and apparently inexhaustible sources of novelty. One reason for this is that nature has had millions of years to try out combinations of things, Most of them have been selected out, eliminated by adversity - inhospitable conditions, scarcity of resources, competition. Those that remain offer miracles of adaptation. like the ability of the clawed frog to heal itself in the soup of bacteria it inhabits.

Sometimes the new is threatening. Nature has recently come up with the AIDS virus, for example. Very likely, out there somewhere is (or was) a natural substance that would help to counteract it. It is not, as people sometimes piously

WASHINGTON — Dr. Michael think, that nature cunningly provides Zasloff of the National Institutes remedies, but rather that almost anything of Health, commenting on his remark- - whether disease or remedy - that can able and beautiful discovery of the "ma- come into being and survive, through the gaining" (powerful natural antibiotics) endless recombinations of matter in the vided remedies or will do so. Nature, then, is the storehouse of the possible. We do not know what is in the storehouse, or whether it is of use to us, until we look. Dr. Zasloff reminds us that there are still some incredible things in there. But while he is recovering something medically invaluable from his frogs. other frogs, and plants and insects and birds and fish, species by the thousands, are being wiped out by unwise develop-ment in Amazonia. Africa and elsewhere.

Americans know about the snail darter, the tiny fish for which environmentalists went to bat against the Tennessee Valley Authority. But many fail to see that it is not the sanctity of a species as such, or even of life as such, that makes the strongest argument for this kind of conservation. It is the irreversible loss of as yet unexplored natural structures. And no natural structure is ever, perhaps, fully explored. No extinction that could have been avoided is excusable.

It would be ironic — but we would never know — if the very organism we had needed for the cure of AIDS had been ploughed under by the bulldozers of some multinational conglomerate.

Of course there are other approaches to medical research than the extraction of naturally occurring substances. But our imaginations are not so fecund that we can afford to waste any source of variety, and we have learned that nature is not, in fact, an inexhaustible source.

It should not be the struggle it is for environmentalists to defend, case by case, the dwindling biological resources of the world. Everyone, including the executives of governments and corporations, ought to be aware of how precarious these re-sources — not just living things but the knowledge they promise - have become. No one can be sure that he or she may not have cause, sooner or later, to be grateful to Dr. Zasloff and his magaining or to the future discoveries his successors will make if we conserve their raw materials.

Let science be free, indeed: Let it be taught, let it be funded. And as far as humanly possible — which may not mean economically profitable, and sooner or later we will have to wake up to that -let the world it studies be kept intact for it against exploitation and depredation.

A Burdened 'Wandering Jew' And a Superb 'Porgy and Bess'

By Sheridan Morley ONDON - "Porgy and Bess," one of a brace of five-hour epies on stage this week, is the greatest glory of the summer: the other is "The Wandering Jew" at the National. There is nothing wrong with the new Mike Alfreds' production on the Lyttelton stage that a few songs and maybe a textual cut of about three hours couldn't solve. It might even have worked on its present scale had it been conceived in the spirit of Nicholas Nickleby" or "Les Miserables"; but in the first production for his National ensemble, Alfreds has denied us anything so enjoyably theatrical as those, and come up instead with the kind of desiccated dramatized reading of random moments from a long-lost text that might just survive on radio across several dull weekends.

The first problem is the text itself, "The Wandering Jew" turns out not to be the old melodrama with which Matheson Lang used to barnstorm the countryside, but the vasily more complex Eugène Sue work published across an eternity of Parisian newsprint during the 1840s. On the evidence of this dramatization by Michelene Wandor and Alfreds. Sue seems to have lacked the strong grasp of plot and stageworthy. What Sue had was an

But before we can get to the reading of the will on which this whole top-heavy farrago depends, we are introduced to 50 characters, some of quite remarkable irrelevance and most of whom spend their time on stage describing the ornate interiors of houses we never see - since Paul Dart's minimal set is a staircase and some curtains endlessly tugged right and left to nations or lives. The real trouble is that despite the everlasting nature of the production, we never have long enough to know or care about any single character before we are whisked off into another sprawling subplot of religious or financial intrigue. Only in the last hour or two does Philip Voss as the marvelously above the rabble and fix us with his glittering sense of criminal purfortune and let us go home to a

At Hyundai we're involved in a whole nest of activities. Varied activities that keep us busy from construction and engineering to shipbuilding, industrial plants, machinery, automobiles and trade. And recently Hyundai has expanded into the hi-tech electronics field of tomorrow.

How have we been able to successfully expand into all these areas? Well, our consistent business philosophy has been strictly conformed to, in all our pursuits. Simply, all Hyundai companies insist on hiring the best people, doing the job better and faster than the competition, and aiming at complete customer satisfaction. Our customers appreciate it and we demand it.

Guess which button he pushed in the lift.

You don't have to be an expert in lateral thinking to solve this particular riddle. You just have to know a little about classically elegant limousines and their drivers. The BMW 735i, for instance, is a reflection of its driver in every respect.

- Club

The car's precision-steering suspension, the torsional rigidity of its bodywork, its sophisticated safety system and standard ABS, all combine to give this BMW exceptional passive safety.

Because its driver doesn't believe in taking unnecessary risks whatever he's doing. Equally, the inline, 6-cylinder engine isn't just a paragon of smooth running refinement. Thanks to its ultramodern management system, it's also a blue-print for fuel efficiency. Because its driver values anything that offers the maximum return for his investment.

The engine's 220 hp guarantees effortless and relaxed motoring as well as impressive ecceleration. It takes just 7.9 seconds to reach 100 km/h. Again, because one of its driver's favourite maxims is "time is money". Helpful electronics, like Active Check-Control, relieve the driver of the less important worries: oil and windscreen washer level checks are things of the past.

After all, everyone knows that the art of delegation and concentrating on the essentials is one of the keys to success.

Most mornings, the BMW is the first car outside the door. Which only goes to prove that to get to the top floor, you've got to stay ahead of the game.

Dow Rises 44 on Huge Volume

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK - The New York Stock Exchange recorded its second-highest volume ever Tuesday as the Dow Jones industrial average added more than 40 points for the second con-

Michael Metz, market strategist with Oppenheimer & Co., said buying rose from a sense of urgency to near panic. He and other analysis agreed that money managers were committing some of the huge amounts of cash that had been known to be on the sidelines, and the reason was emotional.

Harry Villec of Sutro & Co. in San Francisco, said. On substantial volume we have had strong overseas buying institutional buying and individual buying — and most of it had been concentrated in the blue-chip sector."

Rodd Anderson, vice president in equity trading at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc., said,

The Hyatt account was formerly with J. Walter Thompson Co.

Britain's Shandwick PLC, the world's largest independent public relations concern, which began buying U.S. companies last December, has acquired Simon McGarry Public Relations of Los Angeles, which specializes in high-technology companies.

Shandwick said it paid $4 million for Simon McGarry, which last year had revenue of around $2 million. The agency will continue under its name, with its own management headed by David H. Simon, 56, president and chairman, and Marlane McGarry, 46, senior vice president.

Shandwick, which opened a U.S. operation in Stamford, Connecticut, in June, earlier bought Rand Public Relations in New York; Henry J. Kaulman & Associates, advertising and public relations in Washington; and Rogers & Cowan in Beverly Hills, Cahners Publishing of Boston, a trade press giant with 50 or more titles, will soon have a version of its Electronic Business circulating inside China. The expansion comes as a result of a news-gathering trip by Allen S. Furst, the editor, who learned, he said Monday, that the Chinese "want to become the leading low-cost producer of electronic gizmos."

Starting with a test issue next April, the Chinese will take material from Cahners and print and distribute around 17,800 copies of the magazine to 8,900 factories and research and development, units at a Cahners trade fair scheduled for Beijing.

IBM Says It Has New Transistor

> Experimental, 10 Times Faster

impled to Chir Start From Dispatches NEW YORK - International Business Machines Corp. announced Tuesday that it had developed experimental transistors it said are world's smallest and the most powerful of their type.

The transistors can send infor-mation for computing functions 10 times faster than transistors cur-rently on the market, the computer IBM said the "field-effect" tran-sistors could some day make it pos-sible to forecast weather or recognize human speech on machines the size of personal computers instead of on giant mainframe machines. The transistors have the highes

"transconductance" of any fieldeffect transistor ever measured, according to Matt Wordeman, a manager at IBM's laboratories in Yorktown Heights, New York.

Transconductance is a basic neasure of a transitor's power, its ability to send a clear, strong electronic signal. In effect, transistors are tiny on-off switches that form the basis of computers and other electronic gear. Large computer chips contain hundreds of thousands of them, and field-effect transistors are the most common.

Computers run faster with smaller transistors because electrical signals take less time getting from one place to another. This new transistor microchip is 1,000 times thinner than a strand of human hair. The new technology, which is not expected to result in commercial products for 15 years, moves logic elements so quickly — in 10 trillionths of one second — that it can operate only in liquid nitrogen at minus 160 degrees centigrade (minus 321 degrees Fahrenheit). IBM said experimental techniques used to make and test the devices included advanced lithography for writing ultra-thin lines and cooling the devices during op-

International theraid To bear LONDON - Britain's widest measure of trude improved to a provisional £168 million ($263 milion) deficit in June from a revised £527 million deficit in May, the Department of Trade and Industry said Tuesday.

The figures helped calm jitters in the financial markets, which feared that the British economy was over-heating on demand for imports and that inflation would rise. Those wornes increased on Thursday. when the Bank of England forced commercial banks to ruise their base lending rates 1 percentage point to 10 percent.

June's deficit in the current account, which includes merchandise trade as well as services such as shipping and banking and certain financial transfers, was in line with market forecasts of a £100 million to £200 million deficit, and convinced analysis that the massive deficit in May was an aberration.

"Today's trade figures are in line with a trend, rather than last month's very bad numbers," said Geoffrey Dennis, an economist with James Capel & Co., a London brokerage. The May deficit was originally reported at £561 million. Britain's overall deficit in mer-

Japan Predicts 25% Cut In Huge Trade Surplus

TOKYO — The Japanese government has estimated that the country will cut its trade surplus by about 25 percent in the current fiscal year ending in March from $101 billion the previous year, a senior trade official said Tues-

"Japan's efforts to transform its export-oriman dependent on do ented economy to one more dependent on do-mestic demand are finally paying off," said the official of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, who asked not to be named. On Monday, Japan released July figures showing the third consecutive monthly decline in its trade surplus, compared with figures of a year earlier.

A recent rise in crude-oil prices and increasing imports of manufactured goods would push up Japan's total imports in the current year by at least $25 billion, the official said. Exports are expected to remain at about the same annual level because of the yen's rise against the dollar since 1985.

Analysts said HyperCard is so easy to use that even first-time computer buyers would be able to understand it.

Honda Considers 2d U.S. Plant

DETROIT — Honda Corp., which has developed the largest American manufacturing base of any Japanese automaker, says it will decide by the end of the year whether to build a second U.S. assembly plant to produce its hunnry Acura line.

now imported from Japan.

Shinichi Tanaka, a Honda spokesman in Detroit, said Monday that if the company decided to go ahead with the plant, the facility could begin production as early as 1990.

If Honda does not build a new plant, the company by may still move Acura production from Japan to North America by expanding either its Marysville, Ohio, plant or a smaller facility in Canada. Honda also may decide to produce the Acura line only in the United States, exporting the U.S.-built cars to Japan and other nations, Mr. Tanaka said.

Honda officials have been studying whether to build a second U.S. assembly plant for at least two years, but the sales success of Honda's Acura line since its introduction last year — at a time when import quotas remain in effect — has given Honda a new incentive. The company has already shown a greater commitment to U.S. production than any other Japanese automaker. While Toyota and Nissan are still gearing up their U.S. operations, Honda's Marysville plant is scheduled to produce 320,000 Accord reported that a new plant could produce about 350,000 cars a year.

Honda, which began building cars in the United States in 1982, has been rewarded handsomely for its early gamble on U.S. production. With a steady supply of U.S.-built cars unlimited by quotas, Honda has been able to overtake Toyota for U.S. sales leadership among the Japanese automakers, with about 6 percent of the total market.

Nissan began making small trucks in Smyrna. Tennessee, in 1985 and added cars the next year. In 1986, output at the Smyrna plant was about 340,000 cars and trucks, and the company said it hoped to double capacity, with a new production target of 500,000 vehicles a year.

Toyota announced in 1985 that it would set up a plant in the United States with production to start in 1988. The plant, in Georgetown, Kentucky, is expected to turn out 200,000 cars a year. A smaller plant is being built in Ontario. In 1984, Toyota and General Motors Corp. opened a joint venture in Fremont, California, to produce the Chevrolet Nova and later Toyotas.

The rise of the yen against the dollar - making manufacturing costs in Japan relatively higher — has given Honda another incentive to shift Acura production to the United States.

Lebanese Fear Further Inflation As Pound Sags

BEIRUT - Further falls in the value of the Lebanese pound increased apprehension among Lebanese on Tuesday and sent them rushing to stock up on basic necessities before prices go up again. Lebanon's acting prime minister, Salim al-Hoss, on Mon-day proposed selling 20 percent of the country's gold reserves to bolster the pound. The pound fell to a record low of 236 to the U.S. dollar on Tuesday before recovering to close at 221, compared with 219.50 at Monday's close. The currency, previously the Middle East's strongest, has lost 62 percent of its value this year, fueling inflation to about 200 percent. "Believing the pound would

ISRAEL: Austerity Sliced Inflation, but Economic Growth Remains Elusive

the recovery program. "There was a 1.5 shekels to the dollar to stabilize capital flight and even talk about trau-material import prices. the need for a 'strongman' to take charge."

It took a while for politicians to swallow it in one rather quiet gulp. Now, in several recent man-on-the-street economic reports produced by Israel Television, workers ocho the same refrain; While their standard of living, salaries and savings have not grown since July, 1985, they feel richer. After years of running to the bank every day to invest in dollar-linked savings schemes, or rushing to buy anything that was not nailed down to keep up with a 30 percent monthly inflation rate, they can once again relax and plan their lives. Businessmen, especially, feel better off, David Wainshal, president of the Super-Sol supermarket chain, says that during the inflationary era he had to raise prices once a week at his 57 stores and halt all new-store development. To top things off, he was losing customers to corner grocery stores and open-air markets, because consumers had discovered that the small uncomputerized grocers were not as efficient as the big chains at keeping up with soaring prices. Lesson No. 2: To halt inflation overnight, you need a compromise social contract between government and labor unions, industrialists and the self-employed. In the past, Israeli governments always tried to fight inflation by attacking either manufacturers' prices, workers' wages, the govern-ment's budget or the official ex-change rate — but never all of them against European currencies. As a result, Israel was able virtually to freeze its officia: dollar/shekel exchange rate — thus providing the public with the appearance of a stable currency - while effectively devaluing the shekel against the currencies of European nations with which Israel transacts twothirds of its trade. That helped Israel's exports remain competitive. The dollar currently buys 1 6235 shekels. Perhaps the biggest lesson of the past two years, however, is one the Israelis are still learning: that all that has been accomplished so far is just the easy part.

Despite the smaller gap, however, there appears little chance that Japanese investors will stay away from Treasury issues altogether. Analysts said the differential was still large enough to attract the Japanese.

The drop began after mid-May, when bond yields approached the official discount rate, a level traders realized was too low, said Peter Morgan, chief economist for Barclays deZoete Wedd.

A resulting "correction" gathered momen-tum as a sharp increase in the money supply encouraged the Bank of Japan to act to curb speculation in stocks and bonds.

"We've had a really big change in the psychology of interest rates," Mr. Napier said.
"The Bank of Japan started saying, "We've got inflation,' and that created the impression in the market that there was a potential inflationary problem, and the markets tended to push Reading from notes dictated by Steinbrenner, a spokesman said, "He is glad that club support is behind Lou and not behind him. Seitzer and Brett hit consecutive homers in the third inning. Seitzer's 11th of the year, a two-run shot to left-center, gave the rookie 12 RBIs in his last 10 games, during which span he is batting .489. Brett's home run extended his hitting streak to 14 games; leading off the eighth, he registered the ninth twohomer game of his career.

After releasing Saturday's statement, Steinbrenner had said he would have no further remarks about Piniella or the club's current fortunes. Derwinski, the undersecretary of state for security assistance, said from Washington. He added that the incidents are not likely to affect the limited relationship between Washington and Havana. "Government to government," he said, "it's a nonfactor." Derwinski suggested that if the objective of these groups was to promote defections, the visibility of their efforts would probably make them ineffective. " hope in a day or two, they wake up sober," he said.

"and realize they have probably hurt themselves more than the Castro government."

That Old Bermuda High

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — They'll never get the world right. Take this summer's heat in the United States. The newspapers say it is hotter than most summers heat, and the reason is a pool of hot air located at 20,000 feet over the middle of the United States.

One report in a reputable paper said the pool was eigar-shaped and drifting around aimlessly, now moving up toward the Great Lakes. now sloshing back toward the southwestern desert.

Weather fans, I put it to you: Is this hot-air pool in the sky not a complete revision of everything we were taught at TV Weatherman College right after the Mickey Mouse Club went off and the news department clunks got through reading the daily Associated Press leads about Communist nastiness? What they told us was that summer's awful heat was caused by the notorious Bermuda high, right? Re-member the maps with the gorgeous voluptuous curves and the big H for "high pressure" over Myrtle Beach, South Carolina?

"We've got this big old Bermuda high," the weather professor always said. "This big old Bermuda high," he always said, propagandizing us to think of it as an old friend, maybe a sort of meteorological sloppy, overweight uncle who came over on Saturday night and drank a lot of gin and sprawled all over the

And what did we know about the air movement around a high? That the air moved clockwise!

"Right!" cried the weatherman. "With the air movement clockwise around the high, it'll keep pumping all this hot air up from the South-west out of the Gulf of Mexico."

Remember how you hated the Gulf of Mexico after two weeks of a big old Bermuda high pumping all that hot air up from the Southwest?

Several years went by before they discovered the jet stream. That was a surprise. The old-time TV weather professor never told us about the jet stream. It was all fronts and pressure areas and wind blowing. Clockwise around a high, counterclockwise around a low.

enough to notice the jet stream until Chuck Yeager came along. In the old days of the big sexy curves with the H's, the only drama came from vicious lines with cruel, pointed teeth coming out of Canada. No doubt what one of those was, eh, weather fans? It was the famous cold front, which just might, if we were lucky, blow that old Bermuda high out of here and give us a wind from the Northwest, which meant - relief! "Yes, there is a chance we're going to get a little relief," were the famous words that accompanied those pointed teeth.

Discovery of the jet stream created an entirely new view of the meteorological cataclysm. Now the map was dominated by a sinuously wriggling rope-like thing whose vermiform structure pulsated unpredictably north and south, south and north, sometimes buckling up-ward in a great loop toward Cana-da, other times downward toward Mexico as though in a continent-wide state of peristalsis.

Pointing to this formidable display, the weatherman lectured on the quixotic nature of the jet stream. "Here's our jet stream staying well up over the northern tier, but there's a chance it could dip down here all the way to -- "

We were now in weather gradu-ate school. The difference between the old-time voluptuous curves and the jet stream was the difference between "The Cat in the Hat" and being at Yale with the theory of deconstruction.

When children glistening with perspiration asked, "When's it going to be cool enough to breathe again?" you spoke with authority:
"Not until the jet stream moves down off the Yukon and dips into Oklahoma so it can blow that old Bermuda high out of here."

You didn't know about that elevated pool of hot air, did you? Didn't know that regardless how the wind blows or where the jet stream lies, newly discovered hotair pools could keep you roasting.

What's dispiriting about learning that nobody knew much when you were young is the logically en-suing conclusion that your grand-children will someday learn that nobody knew much when you were old, either. It makes you realize Clarice Taylor (right) weaves together the raunchy humor and tragic life story of the comedienne in the play 'Moms' in New York.

Moms Mabley: Pain Behind The Laughter

New York Times Service
FEW YORK — Several years ago Clar-

N EW YORK —Several years ago Clarice Taylor was sitting in a restaurant one day telling Moms Mabley jokes. She was shocked when a friend interrupted to ask, "Who's Moms Mabley?"

"I said, Just wait a minute — I'm going to teach all you white people who Moms Mabley is! How dare you not know who Moms Mabley is?" Taylor recalled. What began as an indignant impulse purned into something of an obsession. Taylor, who has become known to a na-tional U.S. television audience as Bill tracked down and interviewed surviving members of Moms Mabley's family. Mabley, who had been a vaudeville star for half a century when white audiences began to discover her, died in 1975 at the age of 81. Both her raunchy humor and the poignant story of her life have been interwoven in "Moms," a play with music that opened last week at the Astor Place Theater. "Moms," which enjoyed a sold-out run last winter in an earlier version, was based on a concept by Taylor, who stars in the production, it was written by Ben Caldwell, a Harlem-born playwright and

Cosby's mother on "The Cosby Show,"

"I decided I was going to do Moms as I remember her," explained Taylor, who grew up in Harlem and still lives there. "I knewher from sitting in the audience at the Apollo Theater falling out of my seat laughing at her. I wanted to do it like she

But as Taylor researched Mabley's life, a different dimension began to creep into her vision of the piece. "When I saw her, it never dawned on me to even think whether she was ever married, whether she had children, whether she ever cried. She was just Moms Mabley who was going to make me laugh, so that was all I wanted to do with my evening with Moms."

However, when friends read Taylor's initial draft of a script, they wanted to know more about Mabley's life. "I realized I'd like to know more about her, too," Taylor said. That information proved hard to come by, but she managed to track down Mabley's brother, her adopted son, her daughter and her half-brother. "I just went everywhere, following all the leads."

What she learned was hearthreaking. Although Mabley spent her professional life making people laugh, her personal life had more than its share of grief. The great-granddaughter of a slave, she was born Loretta Mary Aiken in North Carolina in 1894, one of 16 children. She was raped at the age of 11 by an older black man, and raped again two years later by the white town sheriff. Both rapes resulted in pregnancies; both babies were given away. Loretta's father, a volunteer fireman, was killed when a fire engine exploded, and her mother was run over and killed by a truck while coming home from church on Christmas Day. At the age of 14, Loretta ran away to join a minstrel show. Although it is unclear whether she was ever married, she bore another daughter later on, only to see her become a drug addict.

As a performer, she changed her name to Jackie Mabley, later acquiring the nick-name "Moms," and the career she launched as a runaway child ultimately earned her such material perquisites as a chauffeur-driven Rolls-Royce and a sable According to my research, she was our only black comedienne; I don't know of any other in those years," said Taylor. "She was finally discovered by whites in the 1960s. But most of her jokes at the beginning were 'in' jokes. She talked about things black people understood. She talked about white people, and she told us things we wanted to hear about them."

Mabley also talked about sex inc ly. Her humor leaned toward the double entendre rather than the use of obscenity that would become popular with such late black comedians as Richard Pryor.

Although Mabley was a lesbian, according to Taylor, her favorite persona was that of "dirty old lady" with a peachant for younger men. She made fan of older men, ridiculing the ways they wielded authority over women as well as the decline of their sexual powers. Her signature line became: "Ain't nothin' an old man can do for me but bring me a message from a young sie, Duke Ellington and Cab Calloway, Mabley in her later years went on to appear on national television with Mery Griffin, Johnny Carson, Flip Wilson, Mike Doug-las, the Smothers Brothers and Bill Cosby, and to play Carnegie Hall, the Kennedy Center and the Copacabana. In the last year of her life she starred for the first time in a movie, "Amazing Grace."

Taylor - who describes her age as "between 55 and 80"—attributes the success of her idea to higher powers. "Once I got started on this, I felt like I was on the end of a comet. I always say that Moms has taken charge of this from the grave. I know I'm not in charge of it; had I been in charge of it, I'd still be sitting in my backyard. All l ever hoped for was for somebody to let me do a reading one evening somewhere, but I ended up producing this show. If anybody had told me I could raise $300,000 — why, I didn't know I could raise $300. My mother is 94 years old, but I was on the phone to ber: Mother, how much money you got? I was begging every-one I knew, and the next thing I knew we got theaters, there's a big ad, we got this advance ricket sale, all kinds of things. It's going to take me live years from now to pinch myself and say, 'It's really hap-

Above all. Taylor hopes to answer the question first asked her by an uninformed friend. "I would like people to know Moms as I have become acquainted with her, and to love her as much as I do," she said, then added softly, "and to know it wasn't easy."
